THE Nichi Nichi Shimbun gives an amusing account of an affray which has just taken place at Fusan, in Corea, between the Japanese and the natives. It appears to have arisen from the indisposition of the Coreans to allow the Japanese to witness an annual festival held in honour of the Coreans killed in detending the Castle of Fosan when besieged in olden time. The whole affair was trivial, and the narration reads very much like one of the collisions in China disease. between foreigners and natives. It is, as a Yokobama contemporary points out, curious and it was fit for human food. "to see how our own experiences are repeated. not only in negotiation, but in the difficulties which attend the contact of alien races." The Coreans appear to have had no sufficing explanation to give for the unexpected display of hostility towards the Japanese, and the latter certainly conducted themselves in a prisoner for some months. But as a treaty of friendship and commerce has this year been concluded, some two or the persons, with the intention of going to see the festival, set out from the Japanese factory at Sdrid, and were about to proceed in the direction of the castle, when they found a laning Mong it. The persons in question too no heed of this, but strode scross the rope and when suddenly from the dark shadows of several chiects, small stones were flong at them, and gradually as if the number of men were increasing, the stones came pouring down like rain from all sides. The Japanese, therefore, thought that as they were unable, being but best to withdraw quickly before any injury was done to them, and so ran back to the Japanese factory. For that day the affair ended here. On the morrow, however, having made some slight preparation of an ambuscade, they again issued forth, and, on arriving at the locality of yesterday, found that the roadway was closed by some pieces of atraw mutting fastened together. "What a strong barrier," they laughingly exclaimed, and, kicking it down, passed through, when, just as they had expected, atones were thrown at them. They halted and gave a signal, whereupon the ambuscading force-that they had previously got ready all came running up together. While calling on them, he gave his horse a blow with bis whip, and bastened up to the place. Facing the foe, be gave a shout of defience, and the Oreans, seeing his appearance, scattered like a pack of spiders dispersing. The person in question, determining that the affair should not be left in that condition, but that he would meet the local officials and hold an interview with them, pressed on his horse, and gallopped up to the Castle of Fusan. He found, however, the Castle gate closed, and therefore he pulled up his horse, and shouted aloud, "Open this gate !" As it then appeared that a large number of men inside the Uastle were bolding the gate closed he called out, "It would be an easy matter to us to kick down such a tumble down Onstle as first we have not bad any intention of proceeding to hostilities." While waiting, there soldiers be seized, and asked, "Who were the persons who flung stones at my countrymen?" Upon their replying that the persons who did so were all men belonging to the war-countrymen, who were thus attacked both from front and roar. The foes in front bere plucked up their spirite, and made the spot the scene of desperate fight, so that our people were more vessels, he said. "What bateful scoundrels!" And brandishing his whip struck (the prisoners) blow after blow. The men keeping the Castle gate closed, dismayed at this display of strength. fled away in some outhown direction. The "certain person" therefore bastened into the interior of the Castle, met with the local officials. and held a conversation with them. The only explanation they gave was that "it was an ancient usage dating from 300 years back." Could this have arisen from the fact of the recent siterations in the Treaty being not yet fully known? But this is ordinarily stated to be the primary condition off affairs where a Treaty of Friendship is drawn up with an uncivilized country! -- Nichi Nichi Shimbur October 20th,
